From the Corporate Box

I think Brazil and Argentina will contest the final on July 11. But watch out for Chile, who could be a dark horse. I hope my favourite team Portugal can go far as well as I love Cristiano Ronaldo. Ronaldo, however, is not as good looking as Spain's Fernando Torres. My highlight of this World Cup must surely be the Portugal-North Korea match while my most memorable moment from the previous World Cups is the 2006 final.

from the previous World Cups is the 2006 final.

I predict that Spain will face Brazil in the final showdown. With such a good looking player like Fernando Torres in the team, Spain can be in the final. I'm sad my favourite team, Italy, have been knocked out. My most memorable moment from the previous World Cup is South Korea reaching the semifinals in 2002, become the first Asian team to do so.

The blame game

African nations don't want to take responsibility

AFRICAN football associations pick foreigners to coach World Cup squads because it makes it easier for them to dodge blame for any poor performances, said a former Angolan player coaching in Europe.

At the first World Cup to be held in the continent, only one of the six African teams had a home-grown coach - Algeria's Rabah Saadane. The rest were coached by a Frenchman, a Brazilian, a Serb and two Swedes.

"I've watched African qualifiers for years and noticed teams are often coached by Africans at that stage, but if they reach the finals they're replaced by foreign coaches," said Lito Vidigal, a former Angola international who currently coaches Portugal's Uniao Leiria.

"The federation chiefs sometimes want to distance themselves from the fallout if the sides fail. They can say they hired the best on offer, from abroad."

Hosts South Africa are expected to appoint long-standing assistant Pitsso Mosimane to replace Brazilian Carlos Alberto Parreira, but no decision has been announced yet.

FIFA President Sepp Blatter has criticised frequent changes of coaches at African sides, saying the constant chopping and changing causes weak tactics and wastes the continent's fine football talent.

But Vidigal said a lack of training and poor organisation at African associations made it difficult for a steady flow of home-grown coaches to develop.

"I'm often asked why African players can come to Europe and succeed while coaches don't," he said. "The players come here young, to improve."

"The coaches have to start in Africa and often there aren't the conditions to develop because the standard of organisation and infrastructures can be low."

"Angola, for example, just came out of a civil war, and the economy is now starting to grow. Let's hope football can follow suit," said Vidigal, 40, who was born in Angola but spent his playing career in Portugal. - Reuters
